Watch the doctors talk about this specific type of chiropractic care here:

An Upper Cervical Adjustment is a precisely calculated adjustment that is performed on the Atlas bone with the extremely gentle Atlas Orthogonal percussion adjusting instrument. This instrument is finely tuned to each patient's individual misalignment to deliver the very best results. The adjustment happens at the neck but the effect of the correction influences the whole spine and all body systems from head to toe.

This is because the Atlas Orthogonal procedure reduces stress to an area of the body called the brain stem.

When this brain stem is under stress it affects the entire body- your muscles pull tight to splint the area and protect your spinal cord which causes your head to cock to one side, a shoulder gets high, tension runs down the neck, mid back, low back and causes a short leg.

The nerves in our spinal column are very sensitive to pressure and stress. When the spine becomes misaligned sufficiently it stresses the nerves, compromises their normal impulses, and changes the function and can cause pain or symptoms throughout the body.
